

Catullus 66.53 and Virgil, Eclogues 5.5

Maribo E. Larsen, Kristoffer

Published in:
Classical Quarterly

Publication date:
2017

Document version
Publisher's PDF, also known as Version of record

Citation for published version (APA):
Maribo E. Larsen, K. (2017). Catullus 66.53 and Virgil, Eclogues 5.5. Classical Quarterly, 67(1), 304-307.

CATULLUS 66.53 AND VIRGIL, ECLOGUES 5.5¹

ἄρτι [ν]εότμητόν με κόμαι ποθέεσκον ἄδε[λφραί καὶ πρόκατε γνωτὸς Μέμνονος Αἰθίοπος ἴετο κυκλώσας βαλιὰ πτερὰ θήλυσ ἀήτης, 53
ἵππο[ς] ιοζώνου Λοκρίδος Ἀρσινόης (Callim. fr. 110.51–4)

abiunctae paulo ante comae mea fata sorores lugebant, cum se Memnonis Aethiopsis unigena impellens nutantibus aera pennis 53
obtulit Arsinoes Locridos ales equos (Catull. 66.51–4)

tu maior: tibi me est aequum parere, Menalca,
siue sub incertas Zephyris motantibus umbras 5
siue antro potius succedimus.
(Verg. Ecl. 5.4–6)²

Modern editors of Catullus all agree on the text of line 53.³ The manuscripts also agree on the line, the only difference being R transmitting mutantibus, while O and G transmit nutantibus.⁴ Nevertheless, a few scholars have in the past questioned the reading of nutantibus. As the lines quoted above illustrate, Catullus generally translates Callimachus' poem closely.⁵ But neither of the words suggested in the manuscripts seems wholly to describe the rapid and vigorous movement of Callimachus' κυκλώσας βαλιὰ πτερὰ, 'having whirled its swift wings'. The reading of nutantibus is somewhat supported by Apuleius' pinnarum nutantium (Met. 6.15.5). But there too the nodding, swaying and wavering sense of nutare does not seem to illustrate the hurried

¹ I am very grateful to Professor Stephen Harrison for his generous supervision and helpful suggestions on this piece. I am also grateful to CQ's anonymous referee for several interesting observations, e.g. that Catullus' nutantibus might be a nod towards Callimachus' θήλυσ ἀήτης, rather than an incorrectly transmitted translation of the action in Callimachus' κυκλώσας βαλιὰ πτερὰ, as I suggest in this article.

² Editions cited: A. Harder, Callimachus Aetia Volume 1: Introduction, Text, and Translation (Oxford, 2012); R.A.B. Mynors, C. Valerii Catulli Carmina (Oxford, 1958); S. Ottaviano and G.B. Conte, P. Vergilius Maro: Bucolica; Georgica (Berlin; Boston, 2011).

³ N. Marinone, Berenice da Callimaco a Catullo (Bologna, 1997), 68; D.F.S. Thomson, Catullus (Toronto, 1997), 167; J. Godwin, Catullus. Poems 61–68 (Warminster, 1995), 82; G. Lafaye, Catulle. Poésies (Paris, 1992), 71; G. Lee, The Poems of Catullus (Oxford, 1990), 108; W. Eisenhut, Catulli Veronensis Liber (Leipzig, 1983), 53; G.P. Goold, Catullus (London, 1983), 168; H. Bardon, Catulli Veronensis Liber (Stuttgart, 1973), 103; W. Kroll, C. Valerius Catullus (Stuttgart, 1959³), 207; R.A.B. Mynors, C. Valerii Catulli Carmina (Oxford, 1958), 77.

⁴ O = Oxoniensis Canonicianus class. lat. 30; G = Parisinus lat. 14137; R = Vaticanus Ottobonianus lat. 1829. The reading of R was soon corrected into nutantibus by the first owner of the manuscript, Coluccio Salutati. The hand of Salutati is generally referred to as R².

⁵ For a wider discussion of Catullus' translation of Callimachus' poem, see recently I. Du Quesnay, 'Three problems in poem 66', in I. Du Quesnay and T. Woodman (edd.), Catullus. Poems, Books, Readers (Cambridge, 2012), 163–4; P. Bing, The Scroll and the Marble: Studies in Reading and Reception in Hellenistic Poetry (Ann Arbor, 2009), 66–82; J.H. Gaisser, Catullus (Oxford, 2009), 147–50.

and rapid action of Jupiter's eagle.⁶ Additionally, the wording of the passage is sufficiently disputed to make it possible that nutantium is not the correct reading.⁷

Hitherto, scholars questioning the paradosis in Catullus have primarily taken the reading of OGR² as the basis of their attempts to emend the word. The sixteenth-century philologist and poet Marcus Antonius Muretus, who did not have access to the line in Callimachus' poem,⁸ interpreted Memnonis Aethiopsis | unigena (66.53–4) as Aurora and suggested the reading natantibus in connection with Aurora's rising.⁹ It is now agreed that the indirect agent of the participle is Zephyrus, the Western Wind, whereby Muretus's conjecture seems to lose its sense.¹⁰ In 1697 Richard Bentley, who did not know the line by Callimachus either, suggested the conjecture nictantibus, and offered as parallels Lucretius' hic ubi nictari nequeunt insistereque alis (6.836), a line later corrected to nixari which is now the accepted reading,¹¹ and Virgil's hic primum paribus nitens Cyllenius alis (Aen. 4.252).¹² nictantibus was conjectured anew, with due acknowledgement of Bentley's conjecture and with the sense of 'flashing', by J.R.C. Martyn,¹³ who offered a further parallel in Lucretius' semina quae faciunt nictantia fulgura flammae (6.182).¹⁴

I think that Bentley and Martyn are right in seeking an intransitive participle. But I am not convinced by their parallels. In Verg. Aen. 4.252 nitens illustrates that Hermes is borne on his wings, and does not describe any flashing quality nor a swiftness of movement; and in Lucr. 6.182 nictantia is not used to describe the wind but the flashes of flame, that is the lightning, which the wind squeezes out of the cloud. I suggest that,

⁶ I thank CQ's anonymous referee for the interesting suggestion that nutare could be used in Catullus 'for the action of landing, in Apuleius for taking off in haughty disdain; both actions requiring the same sort of hovering action'. However, since the action in Callimachus' κυκλώσας βαλιὰ πτερά seems to be rapid and vigorous rather than hovering, I do think that nutantibus is the wrong reading in Catullus. In the case of Apuleius, CQ's referee might indeed be right.

⁷ motantium molibus would certainly give an attractive alliteration. For motare see further down.

⁸ Apart from a few ancient testimonia Callimachus' poem was unknown until the publications by G. Vitelli, 'Frammenti della "Chioma di Berenice" di Callimaco in uno papiro della Società Italiana', SIFC 7 (1929), 3–12, and E. Lobel, '2258. Callimachus', in E. Lobel, E.P. Wegener and C.H. Roberts (edd.), The Oxyrhynchus Papyri. Part XX (London, 1952), 69–107. For a schematic presentation of the transmission of the poem, see P. Hansen and C.G. Tortzen, 'Berenikes plokamos – coma Berenices', Museum Tusculanum 20 (1973), 29–54, at 32.

⁹ M.A. Muretus, Catullus, et in eum commentarius (Venice, 1558), 15: 'Memnonis Aethiopsis unigena, id est, Aurora, quae unum Memnonem ex Tithone genuit, impellente aera natantibus pennis, (ita enim hoc postremum in ueteribus non nullis legitur) id est, oriente.'

¹⁰ Recently A. Harder, Callimachus Aetia Volume 2: Commentary (Oxford, 2012), 852: 'For Zephyrus and Memnon as sons of Eos, cf. Hes. Th. 378ff. ... and 948f.'

¹¹ Cf. C. Bailey, Titii Lucreti Cari De Rerum Natura. Libri Sex. Volume I. Prolegomena, Text and Critical Apparatus. Translation (Oxford, 1947), 556; J. Martin, T. Lucreti Cari De Rerum Natura (Leipzig, 1963), 262; C. Buechner, T. Lucreti Cari De Rerum Natura (Wiesbaden, 1966), 284.

¹² R. Bentley, 'Notae ad elegiam Catulli de coma Berenices', in T.J.G.F. Graevius (ed.), Callimachi Hymni, Epigrammata, et Fragmenta (Utrecht, 1697), 437: 'Omnino nutans & languidum est illud epitheton nutantibus: sed a librariis profectum est, non a Catullo; qui sine dubio scripsit. Unigena impellens NICTANTIBUS aera pennis. Quid sit nictari, vide apud Festum: Lucretius lib. VI. Cujus ubi e regione loci venere volantes; | Claudicat extemplo pennarum NISUS inanis, | Et conamen utrinque alarum proditur omne: | Hic ubi NICTARI nequeunt, insistereque alis. Virgilius IV. Hic primum paribus NITENS Cyllenius alis.'

¹³ J.R.C. Martyn, 'Catullus 66.53', Eranos 72 (1974), 193–5, at 195: 'I suggest that Catullus wrote nictantibus ("flashing"), thus adding movement to the mock-epic assault, and giving the full force [along with impellens] of κυκλώσας.'

¹⁴ According to D. Kiss, Catullus Online. An Online Repertory of Conjectures on Catullus (http://www.catullusonline.org/CatullusOnline/index.php?dir=poems&w_apparatus=1) (2013, apparatus criticus on Catull. 66.53, consulted 14 November 2016) Johannes Schrader suggested nitentibus 'ante 1784'. Unfortunately, Schrader's handwritten notes on Catullus have not been available to me.

in emending the word, we look closer at R's mutantibus rather than at OGR²'s nutantibus, and at the indirect agent of the participle, Zephyrus.

In 1521 Alexander Guarinus put nutantibus in his text, but mentioned motantibus as an alternative in his commentary.¹⁵ I agree with Guarinus that motantibus is a very attractive reading. R's mutantibus could easily be a corrupted form of motantibus, produced by a scribe through an act of normalization. Although motare is very rare,¹⁶ Virgil, who echoes Catullus 66 in the *Aeneid*¹⁷ as well as Catullus 62 and 64 in Eclogues 4 and 6,¹⁸ uses the word in the same form and with Zephyrus as its agent in Ecl. 5.4–6:

tu maior: tibi me est aequum parere, Menalca,
siue sub incertas Zephyris motantibus umbras 5
siue antro potius succedimus.

In order for the parallel to be effective, Virgil ought to use motantibus in an intransitive sense, as Catullus almost certainly does in 66.53. Traditionally, commentators on the passage have read the word as transitive in sense.¹⁹ But I think that there are persuasive arguments in favour of Virgil using motantibus intransitively.²⁰ First, although OLD does not give an intransitive sense of moto,²¹ Lewis and Short seem to suggest that Virgil uses motantibus intransitively in Ecl. 5.5,²² and TLL states that Virgil uses

¹⁵ A. Guarinus, Alexandri Guarini Ferrariensis in C.V. Catullum Veronensem per Baptistam Patrem Emendatum Expositiones ... (Venice, 1521), LXXXVIII: 'ales unigena memnonis aethiopsis impellens aera pennis motantibus uel nutantibus obtulit se'; and further down on the same page: 'impellens aera, uolans pennis motantibus frequenter aera ipsum mouentibus uel pennis mutantibus.'

¹⁶ Manuscripts transmit forms of motare in Verg. Ecl. 5.5, Ecl. 6.28 and Gell. NA 11.3.1. Merkel suggested motasse for mutasse in Ov. Met. 4.46, which is accepted by R.J. Tarrant, P. Ouidi Nasonis Metamorphoses (Oxford, 2004), 95, and A. Barchiesi, Ouidio. Metamorfofi. Volume II (Libri III-IV) (Florence, 2007), 66; cf. G. Rosati, 'Commento. Libro quarto', in Barchiesi (this note), 254: 'motasse è correzione palmare di Merkel per il mutasse dei mss., erroneamente indotto dal contesto metamorfico'. Further, Gronovius suggested motatque for mouet atque in Ov. Met. 11.674, rejected by Tarrant (this note), 339 but accepted by J.D. Reed, Ouidio. Metamorfofi. Volume V (Libri X-XII) (Florence, 2013), 106 (see argumentation on p. 367). Finally, Forbergerus emended motat for mouet/mouit in Priapea 19.3, accepted by E. Baehrens, Poetae Latini Minores. Volumen I (Leipzig, 1879), 64 and most recently by L. Callebat, Priapees (Paris, 2012), 9.

¹⁷ Catull. 66.39–40: inuita, o regina, tuo de uertice cessi, | inuita: adiuro teque tuumque caput; Verg. Aen. 6.460: inuitus, o regina, tuo de litore cessi; Aen. 6.492–3: testor, cara, deos et te, germana, tuumque | dulce caput.

¹⁸ The song of the Fates (Catull. 64.326–81) is echoed in Verg. Ecl. 4.46–7, while Vesper Olympo (Catull. 62.1) seems to be echoed in Verg. Ecl. 6.86.

¹⁹ Servius (= G. Thilo [ed.], Servii Grammatici qui feruntur in Vergilii Bucolica et Georgica [Leipzig, 1878], 54); J.L. de la Cerda, P. Virgilii Maronis Bucolica et Georgica. Argumentis, Explicationibus, et Notis illustrata (Toledo, 1608), 89; A. Forbiger, P. Virgilii Maronis Opera, (Leipzig, 1852), 83. C.G. Heyne, Publius Virgilius Maro. Varietate Lectionis et Perpetua Adnotatione illustratus ... (London, 1830), 149–50 suggests that we read motantibus transitively, but offers a reflective sense as well: 'Mode recte accipias Zephyris motantibus scil. eas umbras. Nisi alteram malis motantibus esse mouentibus se.'

²⁰ G. Wakefield, P. Virgilii Maronis Opera. Volumen Prius (London, 1796), 277 (unnumbered page) seems to suggest an intransitive use: 'Minimè autèm ineptum videtur affirmare, umbras "variare" ob Zephyrorum "motum".' So do T.E. Page, P. Vergili Maronis Bucolica et Georgica (Edinburgh, 1968), 132; R. Coleman, Vergil Eclogues (Cambridge, 1977), 155; and R.D. Williams, Virgil The Eclogues & Georgics (New York, 1979), 110.

²¹ OLD s.v. moto cites the passage as transitive, but fails to mention the crucial preposition sub: 'to set in motion, shaken, stir, etc. incertas Zephyris ~antibus umbras Verg. Ecl. 5.5'.

²² Lewis and Short s.v. moto: 'to keep moving, move about (poet.): Zephyris motantibus, Verg. E. 5.5'.

motantibus in a mediopassive sense.²³ Further, both OLD and Lewis and Short give intransitive meanings of moueo.²⁴ When moueo can be used intransitively, there should be a strong possibility that moto, derived as a frequentative verb from moueo, could be used in that sense as well. Second, the preposition sub must certainly go with incertas umbras. Thus, the western winds do not rapidly and continuously move the uncertain shades. Mopsus suggests that the two of them go beneath the shades, which are uncertain because the western winds rapidly and continuously move about.²⁵

I suggest that motantibus ... pennis describes the rapid, vigorous movement of Zephyrus, as he rushes down to snatch the lock of hair. This reading is in accordance with Callimachus' κυκλώσας βολιά πτερά, it is easily corrupted in the manuscripts into the much more common mutantibus and nutantibus, it finds support in Virgil's Zephyris motantibus and it derives further probability from the Catullan echoes in Eclogues 4 and 6. I therefore suggest that Catullus wrote:

unigena impellens motantibus aera pennis 53

Corpus Christi College, University of Oxford
Department of Greek and Latin,
University of Copenhagen

KRISTOFFER MARIBO ENGELL LARSEN
xtb969@alumni.ku.dk
doi:10.1017/S0009838817000234

IRONY AND THE TEXT OF CAESAR, BELLVM GALLICVM 5.31.5

omnia excogitantur, quare nec sine periculo maneatur nec languore militum et uigiliis periculum augeatur.

et ω

The sentence that comprises 5.31.5 in Caesar's Bellum Gallicum has long been felt to be problematic. It was deleted entirely by H. Meusel.¹ A. Klotz posited a lacuna after quare.² Others sought smaller adjustments.³ Yet, the defence of the text as transmitted

²³ TLL 8.1531.82–3, s.v. moto: 'frequenter, vehementer movere (mediopass. ...): Verg. ecl. 5, 5 sub incertas zephyris -antibus umbras'.

²⁴ OLD s.v. moueo 13; Lewis and Short s.v. moueo II.

²⁵ For the sense of swiftness, see Callebat (n. 16), 128: 'le verbe motare dénotant un mouvement rapide, répété et/ou violent'.

¹ H. Meusel (ed.), C. Iuli Caesaris Belli Gallici Libri VII (Berlin, 1894), 117, following W. Paul.

² A. Klotz (ed.), C. Iuli Caesaris Commentarii, Vol. I: Commentarii Belli Gallici (Leipzig, 1962⁴), 118. He suggests, on the model of Livy 8.38.8, that nec cum periculo eatur has dropped out. He then prints Fleischer's augetur in place of the manuscripts' augeatur.

³ See the several suggestions, with bibliography, listed at H. Meusel, Coniecturae Caesarianae (Berlin, 1893), 38 (or in the Tabulae Coniecturarum at the back of the second volume of H. Meusel, Lexicon Caesarianum [Berlin, 1887–1893], 20). The most ingenious emendation is Hartz's mane eatur for maneatur, which is adopted in L.-A. Constans (ed.), César: Guerre des Gaules (Paris, 1926), 2.154.